

CITYXCAPE

An aerial photograph of a wide, multi-lane city street, likely in Paris, showing heavy traffic and surrounding urban buildings. The street is filled with cars and has a central median with trees. The buildings on either side are multi-story with classic architectural features like mansard roofs and dormer windows. The sky is hazy, suggesting an overcast day.

CONNECTING PEOPLE AND CITIES LIKE NEVER BEFORE

Photo Courtesy of kokorowashinjin on Flickr

In 2011, New York broke its tourism record, attracting over 50 million people. Los Angeles did the same, surpassing 40 million visitors compared to 27 million in 2010. With an expected 4% increase in the next year, the amount of traffic major cities will see is staggering. But with increased mobility comes an increasing demand for flexibility. And despite the large number of travel-related sites, most tourists still cite 'word of mouth' as their primary source of information about local neighborhoods, events, public transportation, and more. Even in today's technologically dependent society, there is an astonishing lack of comprehensive information about some of the most popular cities on the planet. But not anymore.

CityXcape is the survival guide for the modern metropolitan. A revolutionary application invites people to read and write reviews of both cities and their neighborhoods, find attractions, events, and accommodations, and evaluate local services like public transportation. Through a contemporary and user-friendly interface, users can rate everything from local taxi services to the quality of the tap water, search for restaurants and bars, book concerts and events, and instantly find statistics on neighborhood demographics and safety concerns. Integrating a unique social network into an innovative city-search engine, CityXcape is the latest and greatest source of need-to-know information about the world's most visited urban centers.

If you are traveling to a new city, or simply trying to find out more about the one you're in, you need a reliable source of information. Frustrated with the multitude of websites offering inaccurate and unsubstantiated advice about local services and events, CityXcape founder James Pierre Louis set out on a mission to solve what seemed to be an archaic problem: Despite giant leaps in mobile technology, the available tools were still spotty, unreliable, and incomplete, requiring dozens of apps to find the information you need. "It's all about integration," said James. "We want to be the perfect interface between people and cities."

Leading by example, CityXcape is a totally integrated social network, and the most versatile platform for user reviews on the market. Combining the power of social media with a giant database of information about local demographics, accommodations, entertainment, events, and public services, CityXcape is the only way to plan your next trip.

Many sites offer the ability to search by neighborhood, without offering any relevant information about it before they expect you to book. CityXcape offers unprecedented access to user-reviewed information, straight from the people who live there. Ever wonder how far a “convenient walk” from your hotel really is? Just ask! You can upload photos and videos of all your favorite spots, encouraging others to check out your neck of the woods, or find out enough information to make you feel like a local before you go. With a wide range of user-generated reviews and recommendations, you will not only know which neighborhoods have the best restaurants and bars, but the most families, the friendliest people, the most parks and the least crime.

CityXcape also offers a sophisticated system for searching local events, coupled with the convenience of finding friends to go with. Its digital billboard features a wide range of events and activities that can be sorted by category, location, and time, and its unique social media capacity allows you to find other users that share the same interests. Share your plans with old friends or make an impression on someone you’ve never met, you can extend your social network beyond your own city and find reasons to explore new ones.

But don’t forget to find a ride! Public transportation also ranks high among new visitors. Most government websites offer confusing maps and information only a local would understand. CityXcape allows users to review every form of public transportation available, from busses and subways, to trains and trolleys. CityXcape will not only help you figure out where you want to go, it will tell you how to get there, and whether it is safe to stick around after dark.

Don't waste time searching for new cities to discover! Now you can now explore any city you wish from the comfort of your home with CityXcape. Just go to www.cityxcape.com and create your new profile. CityXcape is more than a city search-engine. It is a totally comprehensive, cutting-edge digital platform for a new generation of world travelers that know what they want and are unwilling to compromise. All you have to do is sign up and explore!